

Command line and GUI

For years, I have been intrigued by the idea of understanding what I've now come to know as command line actions on computer. I always thought it was some crazy magical thing that you gained the ability to use if you were a hacker or if you were born in Russia, but now I understand it is practically the same thing as using a computer without a mouse or pretty visual symbol representations of the actions you take. It's still intimidating, but I'm excited to learn how it works, and see if I like it better than the way I'm used to using a computer.